3.1 HTTP

HTTP, or Hyper Text Transfer Protocol, assists as the pillar of the World Wide Web. It make easy communication between web clients and servers, where client computers send HTTP Requests and receive HTTP Responses from web servers to exchange information.

3.1.1 HTTP REQUEST / RESPONSE

HTTP, which stands for Hyper Text Transfer Protocol. This communication occurs through the exchange of HTTP Requests and Responses. Here's how the process unfolds: between clients and servers is done by requests and responses:

- a. A client, typically a web browser, sends an HTTP request to a web server.
- b. The web server receives the request from the client.
- c. The server executes an application to handle the received request.
- d. Following the processing, the server generates an HTTP response, which serves as the output, and sends it back to the browser.
- e. Finally, the client, i.e., the browser, receives and processes the response from the server.

3.1.2 The HTTP Request Circle

The HTTP request/response cycle follows a typical pattern:

- a. The browser initiates a request for an HTML page, and the server responds by providing the requested HTML file.
- b. Subsequently, the browser requests a style sheet, and the server fulfills this request by returning a CSS file.
- c. Following this, if the browser requires a JPG image, it sends a request to the server, which responds by providing the requested JPG file.
- d. Similarly, if the browser needs JavaScript code, it sends a request to server, & the server returns the requested JS file.
- e. Lastly, if the browser requires data, it sends a request to the server, and the server responds by providing the requested data, typically in XML or JSON format.

3.2 HTML

HTML views Hyper Text Markup Language. It is the authentic markup language for Web pages. HTML workings are the office blocks of HTML pages. HTML workings are symbolized by tags

The HTML body tag specifies the primary matter of an HTML document that appears directly on a webpage. It is often known as the <body> element.

3.2.1.8 <form> tag :

The <form> tag in HTML is employed alongside form-related elements to create forms. Within the <form> tags, you can place form-associated elements, and you have the option to reference the form's ID using the form attribute within those elements.

3.2.1.9 <header>tag :

The <header> element is typically used to house a section heading, often represented by an <h1> to <h6> component or <hgroup> component, though it's not mandatory. However, the <header> element can also serve to enclose other elements such as a section table of matters and any pertinent logos, offering flexibility in its usage.

3.2.1.10  tag:

The  tag serves as a way to define sections or divisions within an HTML document. It acts as a vessel for other HTML essentials, allowing them to be styled with CSS or manipulated with JavaScript. Often referred to as the "Division" tag, it's commonly utilized in web development to organize substance such as text, images, navigation bars, headers and footers. The  tag consists of both primary () and final () tags & it's essential to properly close it. It's widely used in web development to compartmentalize data and functions within a webpage, enabling the creation of distinct sections for specific content or functionality. Being a block-level tag,  can group various HTML tags, allowing for the creation of styled sections on the webpage, such as left, center, or right alignments.

3.2.1.11
 tag :

This HTML tag creates hyperlinks that connect one webpage to another. The "href" attribute within the  tag is essential as it defines the destination of a link. In terms of appearance, an unvisited link is typically shown with blue underlining, while a visited link is displayed with purple underlining. When a link is actively being clicked or hovered over, it is commonly displayed with red underlining.

3.2.1.12 <footer> tags:

The < footer > tag in HTML5 is used to define footer for a document within it. It's where you would include details about the content, such as the author's name, copyright info, terms of use links, and contact details. This element helps organize and provide additional information at the end of a webpage or section.

3.3 CSS

CSS, or Cascading Style Sheets, is a style sheet language designed to control the appearance of documents written in HTML documents. It's a fundamental technology of World Wide Web, working in combination with HTML and JavaScript to shape the presentation of web content.

3.3.1 CSS Syntax

A CSS Syntax rule involves declaration & a selector block:

The selector identifies the HTML element to be styled, such as "h1". Within the statement block enclosed in curly braces, one or more statements are included, each separated by semicolons. Each declaration within the block consists of a CSS things name and its corresponding value, disjointed by a colon. In the given example, all  tag components will be styled to have a width of 32 pixels, centered alignment, and red text color.

Ex:

<style> p { font-size: 32px;
    color: red;
    text-align: center;
}
</style>
```

3.3.2 External Style Sheet

The external style sheet is for the most part utilized when, you need to make deviations on numerous pages. It is perfect for this situation since it encourages you to alter the see of the whole web location by changing fair one record. It employs the interface tag on each pages and the connect tag ought to be put interior the head segment.

Ex :

```
body {background-color: orange; font-family:verdana} h1 {color: white;}
p {font-size: 20px;}

The external style sheet may be composed in any content editor but must be spared with a .css expansion. This record ought to not hold HTML components.

```
<!DOCTYPE html>
<html>
<link rel="stylesheet" href="mystyle.css"> <body>

<h1>My First CSS Example</h1>
This is a paragraph.

</body>
</html>
```

3.3.3 Inline Style

Inline CSS allows styling to be applied directly to individual HTML elements. It's a method to incorporate style sheets within an HTML document, though it's recommended to use this approach sparingly due to its limitations. When using inline CSS, the "style" attribute should be added to the relevant HTML tag to apply the desired styles.

```
<htmltag style="cssproperty1:value; cssproperty2:value;"> </htmltag>
```

3.4 JAVASCRIPT

JavaScript, is a versatile programming language usually used in web development. It operates primarily on the client-side, allowing for interactive elements and dynamic content on web pages. With its lightweight nature and object-oriented capabilities, JavaScript facilitates the creation of engaging user experiences. Originally named LiveScript, it was later rebranded as JavaScript, possibly influenced by the popularity of Java. Since its introduction in Netscape 2.0 in 1995, JavaScript with its core functionality embedded in various web browsers, including Internet Explorer and Netscape.

3.4.1 JAVASCRIPT DEVELOPMENT TOOLS

JavaScript's primary advantage lies in its accessibility, as it doesn't necessitate costly development tools; basic text editors like Notepad suffice. Additionally, since it's an interpreted language within web browsers, there's no need to purchase a compiler. To promote eco-friendly practices, various vendors offer sophisticated JavaScript editing tools.

For Instance-

- 1 Microsoft's FrontPage - A renowned HTML editor, includes JavaScript support for crafting dynamic websites. .
- 2 Macromedia's Dreamweaver MX – A favored tool among professional web developers, boasts prebuilt JavaScript components and seamless integration with databases, adhering to modern standards like XHTML and XML.
- 3 Macromedia's home site 5 – A user-friendly HTML and JavaScript editor favored for managing personal websites efficiently.

3.4.2 JAVASCRIPT SYNTAX

JavaScript can be incorporated into a web page by embedding JavaScript statements within <script> tags. While these <script> tags can be placed anywhere in the HTML document, it's generally advised to include them in the <head> tags. The <script> tag informs the browser to interpret the enclosed text.

```
<script ...>
  JavaScript code
</script>
```

The <script> tag has two significant aspects:

- Language - "language" identifies the scripting language being used, JavaScript, although modern HTML versions have deprecated this attribute.
- Type - "type" attribute, now recommended, indicates the scripting language and should be fixed to "text/JavaScript." Therefore, It would resemble this: <script language="JavaScript" type="text/JavaScript">

So it will look like-

```
<script language = "javascript" type = "text/javascript">
    JavaScript code
</script>
```

Whitespace and Line Breaks

Whitespace refers to spaces, tabs, and line breaks in a document or code. It enhances readability and structure. Line breaks are characters that indicate the end of a line. Together, they format text, code, and improve readability.

Semi-Colons are Optional

In JavaScript, semicolons are used to terminate statements. While they're typically recommended for clarity and to prevent unexpected behavior, JavaScript has automatic semicolon insertion (ASI), which can insert semicolons at line breaks if omitted. However, relying solely on ASI can lead to subtle bugs, so it's safer to include them explicitly.

```
<script language = "javascript" type = "text/javascript">
  <!--
    var1 = 10
    var2 = 20
  //-->
</script>
```

But when planned in one line then it shows as follows, you should use the semicolons.

```
<script language = "javascript" type = "text/javascript">
  <!--
    var1 = 10; var2 = 20;
  //-->
</script>
```

Case Sensitivity

JavaScript is sensitive to the capitalization of language keywords, variables and other identifiers, meaning that using different capitalization can result in distinct meanings. It's crucial to maintain consistent capitalization when working with identifiers in JavaScript to avoid errors. So the identifiers will convey different meaning in JavaScript.

Regarding comments, JavaScript holds two types: C-style and C++-style.

- Content following "//" until the conclusion of the line is considered as a comment and is unnoticed by JavaScript.
- Content enclosed between "/" and "/" is taken as a comment, allowing for multi-line comments.

Example:

<script language = "javascript" type = "text/javascript">
  <!--
    // This is a comment. It is similar to comments in C++

    /*
     * This is a multi-line comment in JavaScript
     * It is very similar to comments in C Programming
     */
  //-->
</script>
```

3.4.3 JAVASCRIPT FUNCTIONS

A function in JavaScript is a reusable set of code that can be called from anywhere in your program, saving you from repetitive coding tasks. It promotes modularity by allowing programmers to break down a large program into smaller, more adaptable functions.

JavaScript provides the necessary features to write modular code. Familiar functions like alert() and write() are examples of this. Despite using these functions repeatedly, they are only written once in the core JavaScript, demonstrating the efficiency and reusability that functions offer.

3.4.4 JAVASCRIPT DATATYPES

A crucial aspect is its supported set of data types, which represent and manipulate different kinds of values.

Additionally, JavaScript includes two special data types, null and undefined, each representing a single value. Apart from these primitives, JavaScript also supports a composite data type known as objects.

3.4.5 JAVASCRIPT VARIABLES

JavaScript utilizes variables as named containers to store data. These containers enable data to be stored and referenced by their assigned names. Additionally, numerous variables using the identical "var" keyword. Initializing variable with a value is known as variable initialization

For example:

```
<script type = "text/javascript">
  <!--
    var money;
    var name;
  //-->
</script>
```

Also announce numerous variables with the similar var keyword as shown-

```
<script type = "text/javascript">
  <!--
    var money, name;
  //-->
</script>
```

Loading the value in a variable is known as Variable Initialization.

For case, you might generate variable 'money' and allot the value with 2000.50. For a new variable, we can allot a value at the period of initialization-

```
<script type = "text/javascript">
  <!--
    var name = "Ali";
    var money;
    money = 2000.50;
  //-->
</script>
```

NOTE- In JavaScript, using the "var" keyword only for initializing or declaring variables. Avoid re-declaring the alike variable more than once. JavaScript is such type of language in which variables can hold values of any data type without specifying the type during declaration. Additionally, unlike many other languages, JavaScript automatically adjusts the value type of a variable as the program is executed, handling it dynamically without explicit type declarations.

3.4 SOFTWARE

3.4.1 Browser:

3.4.1.1 GOOGLE CHROME :

Figure 3.15

Google Chrome, created by Google, is a versatile web browser available across different platforms. Initially launched in 2008 for Microsoft Windows, it was subsequently adapted for use on Linux, macOS, iOS, and Android devices. Additionally, Chrome serves as the primary component of Chrome OS, serving as the foundation for web applications on that platform.

3.5.1.2 MOZILLA FIREFOX:

Mozilla Firefox is open-source web browser created by the Mozilla Foundation and the Mozilla Corporation. It's compatible with various operating systems like Windows, macOS, BSD, Linux, illumos, and Solaris. Additionally, there's a version called Firefox for Android designed specifically for mobile.

3.5.1.3 VISUAL STUDIO CODE

Visual Studio Code is a free code editor designed to streamline the coding process, enabling users to start coding quickly. It supports various programming languages, including Python, Java, C++, JavaScript, and many others, allowing developers to work in their preferred language. Visual Studio Code offers a blend of simplicity as a source code editor and commanding developer tool.

FLOW OF PROJECT:

4.1 HOME :

This project is made from an environment friendly organization where we learnt how to make a website application. We have learnt how to develop the front end and the backend of the website which plays an significant role in our daily basis of life.

4.2 ABOUT:

The Emerald Website project seeks to fuse Ayurvedic and Allopathic healthcare, offering a holistic approach to wellness. It links ancient wisdom with modern science, providing diverse resources for personalized health solutions. While the studies highlight the benefit, integrating both systems presents challenges such as differing diagnostic methods and the regulatory standards. However the personalized nature of Ayurveda aligns with precision medicine principles.

4.3 LITERATURE REVIEW

The literature surrounding the integration of Ayurvedic and Allopathic medicine highlights both opportunities and challenges in achieving holistic healthcare. Research indicates that Ayurveda offers a personalized approach to healthcare, considering individual constitution, lifestyle, and environmental factors. Furthermore, Ayurvedic therapies, such as herbal remedies, yoga, and meditation, have shown promising results in managing various chronic conditions.

However, challenges in integrating Ayurveda and Allopathic medicine include differences in diagnostic methods, treatment protocols, and regulatory frameworks. Overall, the literature underscores the potential of integrating Ayurvedic and Allopathic medicine to enhance healthcare outcomes and promote holistic well-being. Further research and interdisciplinary collaboration are needed to overcome challenges and maximize the benefits of integrative healthcare approaches.

Chapter 5: Conclusion

5.1 CONCLUSION :

The objective of this internship is to deliver a comprehensive understanding of website development in web development. A poorly planned website can lead to a negative experience for visitors, which in turn can impact business negatively. Generally, an effective page layout should satisfy key elements such as color contrast, content organizationn, font selection, page style, size, layout, and consistency. To design a well-suited page for a specific audience, designers must analyze user insights and client backgrounds. While it's challenging to create a design that suits every user, there's typically a design that appeals to the majority. A well-designed page tends to attract more visitors, resulting in increased visibility and potentially boosting business opportunities

Learning Outcomes

An internship in web development that involves creating a user friendly healthcare solution website can yield comprehensive learning outcomes. Throughout the internship, Interns can expect to enhance their technical skills significantly by gaining proficiency in various programming languages (such as HTML, CSS, JavaScript) and frameworks/libraries. They will also develop a deep understanding of web development principles, including responsive design, accessibility, and user experience optimization.

Beyond technical abilities, interns develop problem-solving skills by troubleshooting code and finding solutions to complex challenges. Additionally, they gain valuable experience in project management, learning to prioritize tasks, meet deadlines, and collaborate effectively with team members. Moreover, interns will sharpen their problem-solving abilities through the process of designing, developing, and debugging a complete website.
